The Womb of a Lesser Woman: Indian Anglophone Fiction and the Politics of Biotechnological Othering

Muqaddas Arshad is an independent scholar residing in Canada. She recently completed her MS from the International Islamic University Islamabad. Her thesis is titled “Bio-Technological Othering: Unveiling the Fallacy of Immaterial Labor through Kishwar Desai’s and Amulya Malladi’s Fiction”. Intervening in the discourses of postcolonialism and posthumanism together, her thesis brings into focus the marginalization of underprivileged Indian women through technobiopower that is underpinned by discriminatory politics based on race and gender, all the while reasserting neo-imperialist agendas of western modernity.
